VIEWPOINTS

Could Pakistan become a Sharia state? By Michael Kugelman

In reality, the current talks will likely go nowhere. The TTP's demands – which go well beyond Sharia – are hopelessly unrealistic. They reportedly require Pakistan to sever all ties with Washington, and to withdraw all its troops from the tribal belt. And yet nowhere is precisely where Pakistani officials likely want this to go. If the talks fail, Pakistan's powerful army – which has little patience for negotiations with those who have killed thousands of its soldiers – would be able to better marshal public support for a rumored offensive in North Waziristan. Islamabad could declare that the failure of diplomacy has given the state no choice but to use force. Read More
